ABOUT TEAR STAINS

Tear staining is most obvious on pets with white or light color coats or those with heavy wrinkles in their skin. It is also quite common for short nosed breeds of both cats and dogs to have tear stains. The reddish brown color of tear stains is caused by a reaction to the constant moisture, which then creates a breeding ground for yeast and bacteria, thus causing discoloration on the hair coat and creating a distinctive odor.

That Tear Stain Stuff contains an ingredient that helps prevent your dog from developing the bacterial and yeast infections that result in the dark, odoriferous staining. That Tear Stain Stuff is conveniently formulated for use as a dry powder, eliminating the mess that accompanies topical bleaching products.

Good hygiene will go a long way toward keeping your pet's eyes and coat looking their best. Keep your pet's eyes clean and do a daily check for foreign matter. Check the eye lashes; as mentioned before, they often can be the cause of an eye irritation. Prevent this by keeping the hair in the eye area clipped away from the eyes. This allows for improved air circulation resulting in keeping the skin and hair dry.
